Sylvia Littleton joined UNT World in 2014 serving as the assistant for Royal Furgeson, the inaugural dean of the UNT Dallas College of Law. Helping to launch the law school was so special that she still counts the first graduation as her proudest work moment. Now she's indispensable as a master of organization and coordination for UNT System HR head Sheraine Gilliam. A proud wife and mother, Sylvia's retired from the Dallas Police Department as a civilian and worked in several departments at DFW Airport. During the pandemic, she took up gardening with mixed results (tomatoes, good; bugs, bad). For us, the big question is which came first: Her love for Anita Baker or her time working at Motown? DID YOU KNOW?: Conveniently located on the west side of Fort Worth, the Como community attracted new homeowners who worked in the nearby areas of Arlington Heights or affluent River Crest. That is, until determined African Americans started moving in. Funding began to decrease for schools and community developments and Como since is a predominantly Black, low-income community. Its residents are not without pride or leaders, most notably the late Ms. Viola Lee Pitts, who advocated for positive changes like street improvements and school funding. Her legacy lives on in places like the Viola Pitts-Como Community Health Clinic.

Despite being an accomplished MD, DO and MBA, Dr. Michael Williams, UNT System Chancellor and President of the UNT Health Science Center, is an entrepreneur at heart. He told the HSC’s Innovate Fort Worth podcast how he’s used his background and position to transform Fort Worth into a hub of entrepreneurial activity, not only through the work of HSC, but also through his work in the community to solve complex problems and bring new innovations to market.
